

Oxford School's Inspiring Example

September 16, 2008

Letter to the Editor

Chronicle Herald

May 10, 2008

Bravo to students and staff at Oxford School for the wonderful junior high production, Oxford Over the Years. The production was an inspiring example of students from different communities working together to understand and interpret local history an example of the best that our schools can be. The clever weaving of history and its interpretation through the eyes of current students was both informative and entertaining. It was a great gift that the students have given to our community and thanks to the staff, theatre artists, volunteers and parents who supported them in this endeavour. I look forward to Oxford School's continued integration of creative arts in their curriculum and recommend this community-based model to other schools as well.

Jennifer Watts